"The history of fashion photography is the history of a growing confidence in its ability to comment explicitly on the wider world," Ms. Shinkle noted. "Initially, it was reluctant to engage explicitly with politics, but since the end of the '60s it has become more openly, overtly and unabashedly political."

What Steichen did was take photos of the gowns which were designed by famed couturier Paul Poiret. Steichen's photos were published in the April 1911 release of Art et Decoration, a magazine. Those photos later went down in history as the very first ones taken during a modern fashion photography shoot.
