This essay, composed in the late 1930s and published in English translation in Speech Genres & Other Late Essays (1986), edited by Caryl Emerson and Michael Holquist, is, according to Holquist, actually a fragment from one of Bakhtin's several lost books: Its nonappearance resulted... from effects that grew out of the Second World War...

The "Interstitial Perspective" of Homi Bhabha

HOMI BHABHA Mimicry reveals something in so far as it is distinct from what might be called an itself that is behind. The effect of mimicry is cam-ouflage. . . . It is not a question of harmoniz- ing with the background, but against a mottled background, of becoming mottled- exactly like the technique of camouflage practised in human warfare.

And yet Bhabha's model also introduces a number of potentially serious problems in its translation to the complicated process of collective social transformation. That is, Bhabha's formulation of an exilic, liminal space between (rather than supportive of) national constituencies is problematic in that it fails to engage the material conditions of the colonized Third World.

Homi K. Bhabha: the Liminal Negotiation of Cultural Difference

The leading postcolonial theorist Homi K Bhabha is indelibly associated with specific words. There is his notion of cultural hybridity, the idea that world cultures do not appear fully formed and distinct, but are in fact malleable entities endlessly being shaped. Then there is mimicry, his idea that during imperial times the colonised subject was drawn to mirror the customs of the coloniser.

It is, as well, a process of displacement that, paradoxically, makes the presence of the book wondrous to the extent to which it is repeated, translated, misread, displaced. It is with the emblem of the English book - 'signs taken for wonders' - as an insignia of colonial authority and a signifier of colonial desire and discipline, that I want to begin this chapter.
